Quarterly Commentary

For the US Small-Mid (SMID) Cap equity market, the year 2012 closed out in a much more subdued fashion than it opened. Although the Russell 2500 index had a positive gain in the 4th Quarter, it was nowhere near the excitement of the strong double digit triumph posted in the 1st Quarter. Oversaturation of our eardrums with the phrase “Fiscal Cliff” and the back and forth uncertainty surrounding the election season may have kept a lid on the quarter, but a gain is still a gain. In itself, US SMID Cap equities posted a very respectable 16.1% to 19.2% return for the year, depending on your allegiance to either the Growth or Value strains of the Russell 2500 index. In fact, among the primary US market capitalization sectors, the SMID space won the performance crown in 2012 over Small, Mid and Large Cap indices. It was also the first calendar year since 2008 that the Value folks held bragging rights over their Growth brethren, with the Core folks right where we’d expect them, somewhere in the middle. The 4th Quarter played out similarly, with the Russell 2500 Value outperforming the Russell 2500 Growth by nearly 240 bps.

Often, a quarterly market performance can be characterized as driven by a primary characteristic, such as a low quality rally, or a flight to safety. In such cases, either the low quality or high quality metrics dominate. Last quarter was not easily characterized as either in US SMID Cap. Yes, the higher beta stocks within SMID Cap outperformed the lower beta stocks. Yes, some of the best performing market sectors of the Russell 2500 were Materials, Industrials and Consumer Discretionary while more traditional defensive sectors such as Healthcare and Utilities were underperformers. On the other hand, in general, dividend paying stocks in the market outperformed, as did lower P/E and higher market capitalization stocks – all traits normally seen in a flight to safety period.

Specific to the GW Capital portfolio, we had a mixed quarter, outperforming the Russell 2500 but underperforming the higher returning Russell 2500 Value index. For the year, there was nothing mixed about it as we underperformed both benchmarks. However, in a twist to what we’ve seen in the past few years, last quarter it was our Issue Selection that detracted while our Sector Allocation contributed.

Thematically, sector contributions came from our overweights to the better performing sectors Consumer Staples, Industrials and Materials as well as our underweights to the poorer performing sectors Utilities and Financials. Sector allocation detractions came from our overweight to the weak performing Energy sector and underweight to Consumer Discretionary. But when all was said and done, the positives outweighed the negatives, and sector allocation was a winner last quarter.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for our overall Issue Selection. With 9 names returning in the positive double digits last quarter, we had plenty of good news. However, these were slightly outweighed by holding 12 stocks with negative returns for the quarter. While we had some ugly returns come from our Energy holdings (where each of our names had negative performance), negative returning stocks came from several other sectors including Consumer Discretionary and Staples, Financials, Technology and Utilities. Compared to the Russell 2500 Value market sectors, our sector holdings underperformed in each of the sectors held except Financials (where we have done well all year), Healthcare and the small Telecommunications sector.

Turning to transactions, the quarter was relatively light in terms of new names bought into the portfolio. We added a new Consumer Staples company, and that was it. On the sell side, we were also relatively light, with 2 outright sales for the quarter. We sold a stock in the Financial sector and one in the Consumer Discretionary sector. Transaction activity was higher than normal in the add/prune space. We added to 6 positions during the quarter, each one on what we felt was a valuation opportunity (we see more of these during periods of issue selection underperformance) across multiple sectors. We pruned a couple stocks in the Financial sector as our returns continued to excel there. Good performance had brought our Financial sector weight near or above the 25% maximum we seek to limit.

Quarterly Commentary

Looking ahead, as we've been saying for some time, given global macro-economic concerns and their potential to disrupt the US modest economic recovery, we are holding to our outlook of Two steps forward – One and a half steps back. Even with an agreement in hand on US taxes, the upcoming congressional debate and wrangling over the debt ceiling will certainly provide some market angst. While the US credit markets remain supportive, the threat of a default on US Treasuries would obviously provide significant disruption. As economic data continues to come in very mixed, we remain doubtful of a US double-dip recession occurring in the near term. However, the wild card remains, as it has for more than 3 years, the situation in Europe, where we think new recessions are very likely in several countries. We anticipate the uncertainty across the Atlantic to remain a fuel for market volatility here. A wrong move there could dramatically upset the fragile foundation of the US recovery. More so than before, we are also casting a wary eye towards China, as economic reports there remain mixed as to the ongoing strength of their economic engine.
